I stayed during the storm and experienced the full effects of it. My entire home was continuously shaking when it arrived. Shutters were loosened and were on the verge of breaking the windows. I had to run outside during the storm to rip the shutters off to prevent any further damage and to stop water from coming in. The large cast iron gate also ripped open from its latch. I once again had to make another trip outside to prevent the gate from breaking off of its hinges. My first method was to utilize multiple bungee cords to keep the gate together; however, the bungee cords also ripped apart due to the wind strength. Instead, I stuck a metal shovel beneath the gate which prevented it from further moving. Other parts of the home could not be salvaged. Gutters and a portion of the roof was damaged. Our neighbors did not fare well either. Bricks were ripped off of walls and roofs completely gone. I lived through two weeks without electricity (no generator). I primarily ate protein bars and drank protein shakes during the two weeks. Most of my time was spent outdoors rereading Game of Thrones books (the show’s finale really disappointed me). I was visited by a baby alligator after the storm. I earned the nickname Jim Grylls when my family returned from evacuation.

When the electricity returned, I was prepared to return to work and focus on disaster recovery efforts.
